

Public Health Careers

Public health practitioners work in a variety of settings and represent many educational backgrounds. Nevertheless, they share the common goal of improving public health through education, research, and service. Many combine their interests in public health with another discipline. Biostatistics, toxicology, health education, public health nursing, and health care administration are discussed elsewhere in this volume. Other public health careers are described below.